To Whom It May Concern:

I'm writing to you today as a highly skilled and ambitious young professional in the social capital markets sector in a unique position. Two years ago I was in Nairobi, Kenya working for a local e-commerce company when I began an unexpected path to launching a new global social enterprise. Having recently completed school at American University, my company in the process of transitioning from refined concept to actuality. Startup coaches often tell entrepreneurs not to quit their day-jobs; faced with the hardships that come along with a startup, I am currently seeking out a day-job.

While my position as a startup entrepreneur in search of employment is unique, the times we live in are equally unique. Rather than ask you to break the mold of a preexisting position you may be trying to fill, I'd like to propose an opportunity where, together, we can build a more flexible and agile role in your organization that leverages my unique position to best suit your needs.

I'm offering an opportunity to hire a high-caliber, self-motivated employee that can effectively transcend traditional working silos to serve the organization wherever I'm needed, filling roles from administrative to technical. I bring a highly qualified background and knowledge in global development, social enterprise, and microfinance (My website attracts hundreds of readers from around the world, daily). Furthermore, in exchange for your accommodation of my unique situation, I am willing to negotiate a salary that is a steal for you and sustainable for me.

This is a chance to not only help a young entrepreneur get on his feet, but to cost-effectively fulfill the needs of your organization. I have a very strong foundation and can be a great asset to your team. You can review my credentials and get a better idea of my background by visiting my LinkedIn profile and my personal website (listed below). Thank you for taking the time to review my proposal, and I hope that we can schedule a time to talk on the phone or in person about how we may be able to help each other!

Sincerely,

Marco Puccia
